A study on the effective social–cultural factors on women's addiction

Bayati, P.[1]

Abstract

Objective: The aim of this study is to explain about the effective social–cultural factor on the drug–addicted women. In other word, we try to answer this question, which of the social–cultural factor are effective to drugs. Method: Different and new approach of this paper is study together on the effective social–cultural factors on the drug–addicted women. Results: Hypothesis has resulted from six dominant theoretical perspectives. these hypothesizes are based on Agnew's general stain theory, sutherland's learning theory, Kohen's Delinquent subcultural, show and Mckay's ecological theory, Hir schi's social control theory, Independent variables included women information, family disintegrated, availability of drugs, addiction of family member, peer groups, parents observation, marriage women position, training parents, training spouse and training addicted women. Conclusion: This is a survey research. The data collected by questionnaire and interview. The sample size was 100 people from drug– addicted women of chitgar camp. Having gathered the data spss soft wares are used for data processing according to deceptive and inferential statistic like person and spearman. the result show that women information, family disintegrated, availability of drug, addiction of family member, training women and training parents as affective factors on women's addiction.

Key words: addicted women, social factors, cultural factors, psychotropic

1. M.A. of Women Studies, Open University. E.Mail: parvaneh_bayati84@yahoo.com