

The Comparison of Tendency to Addiction and Adjustment in Girls and Boys Students

Sheydae, R.<sup>1</sup>, Pirkhaefi, A.<sup>2</sup>

Abstract

Objective: This study compared the drug tended to fit 17-12 year old male and female students were holy city of Rabat. Methods: The research design of a comparison. Results: The study subjects consisted of 21 male and 29 female students who cover the charity Fatima Zahra studying in Rabat Karim units were selected by random sampling. Tool: in the study to measure the tendency to addiction People exposed to drug test Dhkrayan and Bell was used to test adjustment. The results showed an inverse relation between the tendency to addiction in adolescents and that there are significant inconsistencies. The relation between the subscales inconsistency and tendency to addiction, a strong and significant positive relationship between family conflicts to tendency to addiction exists. Inconsistency between the two groups of boys and girls in terms of variables and there is significant risk of addiction. So that the average inconsistency in boys than girls and boys at risk for substance abuse than are females. Conclusions: The tendency to addiction, there are significant adjustment among adolescents and the tendency to addiction in adolescent boys and girls significant adjustment there. Keywords: Tendency to Addiction, Adjustment, Adolescents

۸

۸

سال چهارم، شماره ۱۴، تابستان ۱۳۸۹
Vol. 4, No. 14, Summer 2010

-
1. Author-in-chief: M. A. in Rehabilitation Counseling, Allameh Tabatabaee University. E-mail: r.shaydae_allameh@yahoo.com
  2. Assistant Professor of Psychology Department, Garmsar Open University