The Study of Consumption Pattern of Addiction among Women Who Referred to Damage Reducing Center

Khademi, N.¹, Leghaie, Z.², Alikhani, A. R.³

Abstract:
Objective: Drug addiction is one of common deviations in present age, which sacrifices numerous victims in a year, and inflicting serious damages on families and society. Present study was aimed to study of consumption pattern of addiction among women who referred to damage reducing center in Kermanshah province.

Methods: This research was a descriptive-analytical study. With consideration of accessing limitation, all women (n=121) who referred to the center were selected as a sample. The studied variables were addiction age, addiction reason, drug consumption pattern, marital status.

Results: More than 72.6 of clients reported opium use record. Also, Crack, Lactuarym, Heroin, Norjazak and Tamjizak, Meth Amphetamine, and Hashish were more used materials, respectively.

Conclusion: These statistics and digits can be applied in addiction policy settings.

Keywords: Addiction, Consumption Pattern, Vulnerable Groups, Addicted Women

¹. Author-in-Chief: Assistant Professor of Prevention of Diseases, Kermanshah Medical Sciences University.
². B.A of Statistics. Kermanshah Medical Sciences University.
³. B.A of Prevention and Kermanshah Medical Sciences University